Click the Sharing buttons: Premium Assam is a state with rich culture and heritage to offer and one of the most popular festivals here is Bihu, a harvest festival. Bohag Bihu falls on April 14 this year and women dress in traditional attire on this occasion. Saree is one garment that is ethnic to India but the ways of draping it are many. The Assamese have a different saree called Mekhela Chadar that comes in two parts and is draped in a different way too. Not everyone knows how to wear it well and so, if you are celebrating Bihu and want to drape it the traditional way, here is a step-by-step tutorial of how to drape Mekhela Chadar. Also Read - Viral Video: Woman Performs Bihu Dance on Manike Mage Hithe, Video Delights People | Watch Step 1: Wear the bottom part of Mekhela Chadar like you wear a skirt. Also Read - Protests against Citizenship Amendment Bill rage on amid Bihu celebrations Step 2: Form a pleat with your right hand and hold it there. Step 3: Use your left hand to form two pleats and hold one each between your index and forefinger. Step 4: Bring all the three pleats together and align them properly to all the way down. Step 5: Tuck the upper part into your petticoat till you get the right length. The petticoat should sit below your navel. Step 6: Now, put the upper part of the saree on your left arm. Adjust the pallu according to the length you like. Step 7: Bring the other end of the Chadar to the front in a way that it drapes one time around your waist. Step 8: Tuck the inner border into your petticoat but let one end dangle such that it forms a neat triangle pleat aligning with the Mekhela. Step 9: Pin up this pleat with the Mekhela so that it stays put. Step 10: Make a few pleats of the Chadar on your shoulder and then pin them up together. Step 11: You can bring the remaining part of the Chadar in the front, across your back. Step 12: To be more traditional, you can cover your head as well with the Chadar.
