Having heard of Lucan's role in the war, he promoted him to the position of chief cartographer.[53] Elemental Unrest This section concerns content related to Wrath of the Lich King. Varian no longer felt alone in his struggle to protect the world. The Alliance races of the Twilight cultists attacked the Horde representatives while the Horde races of the Twilight cultists attacked the Alliance representatives. Varian appears in Snow Fight, a children's book written by Chris Metzen and illustrated by Wei Wang. A fast kill was vital as Stormwind is highly populated during most hours and Alliance players were very likely to come to the aid of their King. Anduin overhears their argument and interrupts them. Varian was surprised and relieved to find that Jaina had survived the battle. Maraad ended his story with his own experience with the Old Horde, and how he desires redemption from his past failures by preventing the Iron Horde from committing the same atrocities he had to endure.[83] With his confidence restored, the King gave the order to sound the call to arms, stating that Azeroth needs heroes now more than ever. After losing his friend Bolvar Fordragon, and defeating Grand Apothecary Putress, Varian appears to declare war against the Horde during the riends, Lo'Gosh and Varian were left to grieve the loss of their son. Additionally, Varian's elite guard were spread all the way along the path to the king, ranging as far as the steps of the keep itself. Varian and his allies since then have been working hard to rebuild the fleet, with every race of the Alliance synergizing their military to provide an effective counter-attack. Forced overboard with a looming abyssal preparing to attack, Varian was helped by Sylvanas, who leapt onto the Alliance gunship and fought with Varian to overcome the demon. Shortly after the people of Stormwind reached Lordaeron, King Terenas — at Lothar's urging — gathered all the leaders of the other human kingdoms together at the Council of Seven Nations. He deemed this as an act of treachery and demanded retribution for his friend's death. Garrosh escaped and the temple was attacked by dragon-riders. If you speak to him and tell him he is not needed, you will need to reset the instance (provided you are not already saved to it) in order to gain the buff again. Both father and son fought in sync, with Varian using Shalamayne to defend his son from the assassins while Anduin used his bow and arrows to shoot at them from a distance. Chi-Ji tends to call Varian 'wolf'.[citation needed] Likewise, Anduin's comic is called Son of the Wolf. Varian became curious as to why Maraad was so eager for him to sign the declaration of war, stating that he seemed too bloodthirsty for a paladin. After introducing the two,[63] Varian reveals that he has been amassing a war fleet to assault the Twilight's Hammer in the Twilight's Hammer in the Sepulcher of the First Ones, as Anduin struggled to regain control from the Jailer, he suddenly saw Varian appear by his side to remind him that Shalamayne had not been forged by darkness, but by valor. Retrieved on 2012-11-02. When Varian was about to execute Moira, Anduin, who had rushed back to Ironforge, convinced Varian that it would be better to guide Moira to be a better leader rather than to just execute her. Varian, dangling from a rope ladder on the side with Genn reaching down from the deck to pull him up, can only see two options: have Genn pull him up and hope the gunship will escape but risk it being pulled down and destroyed and killing everyone on board, or let go and destroy the Reaver so the gunship can escape but leaving himself behind to certain death. Jaina returned and informed Varian that Varimathras and the Royal Apothecary Society had betrayed them all and the Horde no longer controlled Undercity. Soon Jaina and Marcus Jonathan arrived on the scene, followed by a host of guards. The vision of his father reminded him to act as a king.[91] Varian appearing to Anduin in the Sepulcher of the First Ones. Driven by rage and determination, he grabbed Anduin's arm and inadvertently hurt him. In addition Genn Greymane accompanied Varian, further complicating the battle. Turalyon also oversaw the repatriation of the citizens of Stormwind.[24] The Stonemasons, led by Edwin VanCleef, came to lend their help in rebuilding Stormwind and hoped to forge a new future for themselves, with aspirations that riches would soon follow their work's completion. Varian is left alone to fight and tricks Onyxia into believing she had killed him. Lo'Gosh squares off against a Naga. Whatever the cost, they would make that black beast pay for his assault. Varian later arrived at the meeting place that Benedictus told him, Tiffin's grave at Stormwind City Cemetery. After being directly approached by Thassarian[50] with a personal request from Highlord Tirion Fordring, King Varian permits death knights of the Ebon Blade into the Alliance to aid in the fight against the Lich King.[51] Battle for the Undercity This section concerns content related to Wrath of the Lich King. With both his team mates defenseless, Varian engaged Hyku Steeledge in single combat and slew him. Varian concurs with his son's assessment and destroys the Sha and thereby forbidding its use.[73] Though King Varian had no intention of interfering with Dalaran's neutrality, the Sunreavers of Dalaran still claim fealty to the Horde and represent a major threat to the war effort. With their forces combined, they begin their assault, killing many demons and closing their portals. One Varian became Lo'Gosh, the gladiator champion of the Crimson Ring and fought to regain his memories and birthright. Varian was not certain he could defeat what was essentially the same threat that killed his father and razed his city. The armies defeat the giant and chase after Gul'dan. Having lured Varian into the worgen's hunting grounds, an argument was sparked between Varian and Genn about who was the better hunter. He could only watch on in horror, as Garona, with a tear-streaked smirk, plunged a dagger in his father's chest. After receiving word of Bolvar's death, Varian was overwhelmed with anger and sorrow, having considered Bolvar a brother for ruling his kingdom and raising his son during his absence. On the docks, Broll and Lo'Gosh reunited with Valeera and prepared to set out for Stormwind.[38] Revelations This section concerns content related to the Warcraft manga or comics. Varian later called for a second Alliance summit, this time being a proponent for the induction of Gilneas and the worgen into the Alliance. The King closed his statement by telling Garrosh was intelligent and he cared for the orcish race. He leaves disgusted with his father's attitude towards Jaina and pacifism, a philosophy that he also believes in. Varian watched the construction of the new fleet from Stormwind Harbor and then returned to his keep to plan the war. Doubts began to fill Lo'Gosh's head as they traveled to Menethil Harbor.[39] During the voyage, their vessel was attacked by naga led by Morgala Darksquall. By the time of the Pandaria Campaign, Varian has become far more composed and confident; proving his new attitude by rejecting the notion of utilizing the Sha as a weapon, leading a careful, controlled, and strategic operation to free the Temple of the Red Crane from Horde control, earning the var to be over with Garrosh's arrest, willing to give the Horde a second chance under their new Warchief.[94] When his consciousness was split by Onyxia, so too was his personality. Varian figures that it would be best for him and Anduin to spend some time apart while he figures out how to deal with the aggressive outbursts evoked by his Lo'Gosh personality. Varian, again accompanied by Jaina, appears in Icecrown Citadel during the Alliance outro following the defeat of Deathbringer Saurfang. Before committing regular forces to the assault on Durotar, King Varian sent SI:7 agents Amber Kearnen and Sully McLeary to scout out a naval landing site near Orgrimmar, learn the enemy's weaknesses, and give Alliance landing forces any advantage they can find.[77] After discovering a Horde civil war, [78] an Alliance champion was sent as an envoy and established a coalition with the Darkspear Rebellion. [79] With a little deft political maneuvering, the Alliance beach landing and ensure that trolls and orcs would kill one another up and down Durotar. [80][81] After the civil war became escalated, King Wrynn will send the Alliance champion a letter commending the player for his/her efforts and even though he doesn't trust Vol'jin, he agrees with the player's decision on the field. [60R] Order Must Be Restored ^ Chris Metzen on Twitter - "Hi Chris, may I ask how you personally felt about Varian dying at the start of Legion? As it takes off, however, Gul'dan summons an immense Fel Reaver through the portal, which grabs onto the side of the gunship, causing it to tip and send some Alliance soldiers plummeting to their deaths. Varian felt the warmth and comfort of his ancestors across the great divide. Despite Moira being a tyrant who held the city hostage, she was still the legitimate heir to the throne, and killing her would only put the succession of Ironforge into question, thus leading to more chaos and conflict. Varian apologized to his son for being so blind in not recognizing the man Anduin had become. Following Varian's example, the worgen swarmed the massive magnataur and targeted their weak spots to bring the giant beasts down. However, the Varian that returned was arrogant, frivolous, and markedly interested in Katrana Prestor. He provides the [Strength of Wrynn] buff for Alliance raiding parties. SI:7 notes that the nobles of Stormwind ran up a huge debt by expanding the kingdom's military presence through Elwynn and into Stranglethorn. King and prince were a perfect team, with Varian dealing unending brute force and Anduin unleashing a fusillade of biting razorheads where it would do the most damage. With one of Genn's subjects in danger, the Gilnean king and the king of Stormwind worked together to kill the giant bear, with Varian landing a killing blow to the bear's neck with his hunting knife. Varian and eighteen SI:7 operatives embarked on a mission to liberate Ironforge and assassinate Moira Thaurissan. Valeera quickly subdued the man, but he transformed into a black dragon and fled.[43] Outside Stormwind, Anduin, Varian, Bolvar, and Lady Prestor were riding horseback through the countryside with Anduin trying to implore his father to listen to Stormwind's problems, but before he could elaborate, his horse was purposely roused by an unknown assailant causing Anduin to lose control and tumble over a ledge. Despite an invisible wall preventing Jaina and Aegwynn from further delving into his memories, they were able to confirm that he had been traveling to Theramore and that he was, in fact, Varian Wrynn, the lost King of Stormwind [38] Clearly having been the victim of a dark magic attack, Jaina prepared one of her own ships to carry Lo'Gosh to Stormwind in the Eastern Kingdoms, where she hoped that he could learn the identity of his enemies. Fort Wrynn, the main Alliance base in Talador, and Wrynn's Vanguard, the Alliance forces in Ashran, are both named after him. Yet Prince Anduin Wrynn, having overheard his father and Malfurion's argument, decided that he would not be returning with him and would be traveling with Velen on his journey. While bereft of will, he would break free once again. Varian responded to his inquiry that he didn't have any deep philosophy on the matter, only that he believed that the world is based on cycles, and that death, kingdoms, and kings come and go, but truth, honor, and duty last forever. Varian Wrynn was born to King Llane Wrynn by Oueen Taria Wrynn in Stormwind City ten years before the First War[15][16] and as a youth lived a joyful and prosperous life as prince of the Kingdom would be destroyed and every city would be burned as Stormwind had been, and their children would be orphaned like Varian if they even survived at all. Morgala attempted to capture Varian but he followed as that part of the ocean contained many rocky shoals. Varian was about to strike a mortal blow to Garona when Med'an entered to protect his mother. His reasons are many: when Varian was a young boy, he saw his father murdered by the half-orc Garona; the orcs' warchief, Orgrim Doomhammer, slew the valorous Anduin Lothar, who had delivered Varian safely to Lordaeron after the fall of Stormwind; Varian was later enslaved by the orcish gladiator trainer Rehgar Earthfury; and at the Wrath Gate many brave Alliance soldiers died at the hands of the Forsaken's Royal Apothecary Society. I think... He was later recalled by Arthas as his "best friend" for much of their childhood and adult lives, and Varian frequently sparred with the less-athletic Arthas in an attempt to toughen him and make him a better paladin. Varian, however, knew that they were only being kept busy while the dark sorcerer of the assassins was summoning something insidious to kill them. Eventually, they encountered the brood mother herself, with Anduin imprisoned under her iron grip. Reaching up, he passes the letter for Anduin into Genn's open hand and asks him to deliver it to his son. Tracking Putress to the Apothecarium, Varian and Jaina defeated him. Genn told Anduin that he really didn't need to see this, but the boy continued to the entrance of the Tomb. With their help, Anduin was able to split Kingsmourne back into Shalla'tor and Ellemayne and free himself.[92] It is not stated whether these appearances of Varian and Varok were their actual souls or only part of Anduin's imagination. By displaying patience, Varian was able to lure out the Horde army from the Temple of the Red Crane and decimate them with the Alliance's hidden traps. Varian decides to search for Tirion Fordring and finds him held captive by Gul'dan. In his final moments, the mage taunted Lo'Gosh by claiming that his son would be murdered.[40] The three gladiators and Thargas then continued on their way to Ironforge; a perilous journey beset by dangerous assassins and violent encounters with Dark Iron dwarves.[41] Lo'Gosh and his entourage went on the become instrumental in the reclaiming of the Thandol Span Bridges which were being occupied by Dark Iron forces, although at the cost of Hjalmar's life. She frantically requested that Varian and her immediately rally the Alliance fleets and annihilate the Horde in Orgrimmar, who would no doubt have it, their heroics at Thandol Span would lead them to encounter King Magni Bronzebeard, the dwarven king of Ironforge.[42] While Lo'Gosh departed from Menethil Harbor, King Magni Bronzebeard was on a visit in Stormwind City and Bolvar Fordragon. Afterwards, he noticed Zaela and knocked her out of the dragon. Having been reminded of their love for Tiffin and of family, the bad blood between father and son soon faded away. Gul'dan gloats to the dying king that he will be remembered "as the king who sacrificed his life for nothing." Varian defiantly looks at the warlock in the eyes and says "For the Alliance." Gul'dan then painfully floods Varian's body with overwhelming fel magic, causing the wounded King to Stormwind's geography made getting to Varian undetected nearly impossible. Anduin blessed the marines and his father, who were going off to fight the Horde. Bolvar surmised that Varian's annoyance, Baros noted that the extensive repairs to the city wouldn't be cheap. The faltering gunship crashed into the sea, with Varian and numerous soldiers sinking deeper into the sea along with it and the compass disappearing in the depths. In the Trial of Tranquility, Varian and Broll escape. As Varian walks away, he threatens Vol'jin that should his Horde fail to uphold honor like Garrosh did, the Alliance will return to end them. Under his daring leadership, the humans of Stormwind led the Alliance to victory against the Lich King in Northrend. The riot was dangerous and chaotic and in the confusion Varian's young queen was accidentally killed when a large rock hit her upside the head. Though Malfurion Stormrage tried to persuade Varian to reconsider his position, his pleas fell on deaf ears. With the spirit of Goldrinn fueling him with renewed vigor, Varian led the charge against the Horde, killing magnataur, Korkron, and Horde races that stood in his way. Garrosh Hellscream, Tyrande Whisperwind, and Malfurion Stormrage joined this list during Cataclysm. King Varian states that he is preparing the Alliance fleet for the upcoming naval assault on Durotar.[81] Siege of Orgrimmar This section concerns content related to Mists of Pandaria. Varian's gunship had collided with the Horde gunship and stripped Edwin VanCleef and his Stonemasons of their promised rewards.[26] Edwin VanCleef and the Stonemasons set to rioting in the streets of Stormwind, demanding just compensation. The comic series suggests that this Varian was the "twin" which did not manage to escape, but was instead captured by the naga and later ransomed back to Stormwind into the hands of Lady Katrana Prestor. The night elf used it to call Sharptalon from Ashenvale, and immediately made a bid for freedom with Lo'Gosh later went on more heroic exploits: they've helped the Silverwing Sentinels defeat the Warsong Outriders at Warsong Gulch and recovered the missing Idol of Remulos.[37] Eventually. they journeyed to the Cenarion Enclave in Darnassus, where after they've relinquished the Idol of Remulos to Archdruid Fandral Staghelm, they were summoned to dinner by Tyrande, who after hearing of the two friends' feats and current predicament, sent the two to Theramore. Benedictus noted that the times have changed, and it is clear that they must change with them. The Stormwind treasury also rewarded Gazlowe with diamonds for his part in the events.[9] Jaina Proudmoore learned about the Horde's plan to attack Theramore and conquer the whole of Kalimdor, she contacted King Varian to request reinforcements He asked Jaina whether Baine knew of Garrosh's mana bomb on which she responded he didn't know. 71 ^ Beyond the Dark Portal ^ Golden, Christie. It seems that Varian knows, or at least heard some rumors, about the flames of destruction, our champions drove them back. Anduin urged his father not to give in to her threats and Lo'Gosh agreed to fight and die with Anduin if need be. The young King Varian. Given Varian's temperament, fighting ability, and appearance the similarities are striking. Many lives will be lost, but the future of Azeroth depends on our victory. In the aftermath of the battle, Varian commended Moira and the Dark Irons on their victory, even stating that the Bronzebeards and Wildhammers would regret not having been there to share in her glory. Varian, having studied sword fighting with Windsor for years, held a deep respect for him as a friend and ally. One side retained all of Varian's knowledge, manners, and etiquette; while the other, Lo'Gosh, retained his skill in battle and is known to wage war with a relish equal to his enemies.[57] Though the two halves were eventually reunited, they did so imperfectly. In tribute to King Varian Wrynn known to some as LO'GOSH the "Ghost Wolf" His miraculous return from long years of exile and hardship has ignited a new fire of spirit and courage within the Alliance. King Varian and other Alliance representatives have congregated in the War Room to develop an effective strategy to fight the Horde. The king paused for just a moment, trying to smile through the pain, and then realized with utmost clarity that he now knew exactly what to say. He opened his palms to the sky and spoke the words to dispel magic. General Marcus then informed him that the nobles awaited his presence in the throne room. As Varian touched Tiffin's locket, he reflected on how no one will ever understand the burdens he must endure to be a leader, and the things he must become Varian asks Anduin to trust him to do the right thing and to also lend him his support. With all the challenges that have tested the Alliance in my absence, it warms my heart to see heroes such as yourself defending our coalition. He would willingly give his life to save his people. His excitement was soon extinguished though when he saw the shock in his son's face, which revealed that he had not expected to see him. Throughout the course of the Cataclysm, Varian slowly grew more tolerant and diplomatic, taking many lessons from his son.[55] He also reconciled his fury at tragedies he's endured with his hot-blooded behavior, enabling him to become more level headed in administering the justice he desired.[93] Unlike Garrosh he did not use the Cataclysm to gain military advantage and focused on the more pressing threat of Deathwing and the Old Gods. After rescuing the elemental that the trolls were satiating with blood sacrifices to elicit the unnatural storm, the king's champions regrouped with Moira's Forgeguard and together their forces slew the Zandalari leader and captured the Frostmane village. Varian prepared his son for Tyrande's questions as he was a witness. [King Varian Wrynn's Silver Coin] can be fished from the Dalaran fountain. Stormwind is doing what we can, but it will require the effort of everyone to overcome. Varian and Anduin prepared themselves for the assault by keeping their backs against the west wall, thus preventing the assassins from surrounding them. Thrall was only willingness to reprimand the savagery in which the attack was carried out, the thievery of the night elves' goods, or apologize for the murders, has weakened his popularity with Alliance leaders. Even after Deathwing's attack, Stormwind will always remain vigilant and stand defiantly against their enemies. 36 ^ Wolfheart, chapter 15 ^ Traveler: The Spiral Path ^ [15-30] Survey Alcaz Island ^ World of Warcraft Game Manual ^ [54] The True Masters ^ [37] Warn Bolvar!
